

Supporting Information for

Hydrogen and methane production from Styrofoam waste by an atmospheric-pressure microwave plasma reactor

Raynard Christianson Sanito^{1,2}, Ya-Wen Chen², Sheng-Jie You^{2,3,4}, Hsi-Hsien Yang⁵, Yen-Kung Hsieh⁶, Ya-Fen Wang^{2,3,4*}

¹Department of Civil Engineering, Chung Yuan Christian University, Taoyuan 320, Taiwan.

²Department of Environmental Engineering, Chung Yuan Christian University, Taoyuan 320, Taiwan.

³R & D Centre for Membrane Technology, Chung Yuan Christian University, Taoyuan 320, Taiwan

⁴Center for Environmental Risk Management, Chung Yuan Christian University, Taoyuan 320, Taiwan

⁵Department of Environmental Engineering and Management, Chaoyang University of Technology, Taichung 413, Taiwan

⁶Marine ecology and conservation research center, National Academy of Marine Research, Kaohsiung 806, Taiwan

Fig S1. The final residue of PSF waste after treatment in an atmospheric-pressure microwave plasma reactor

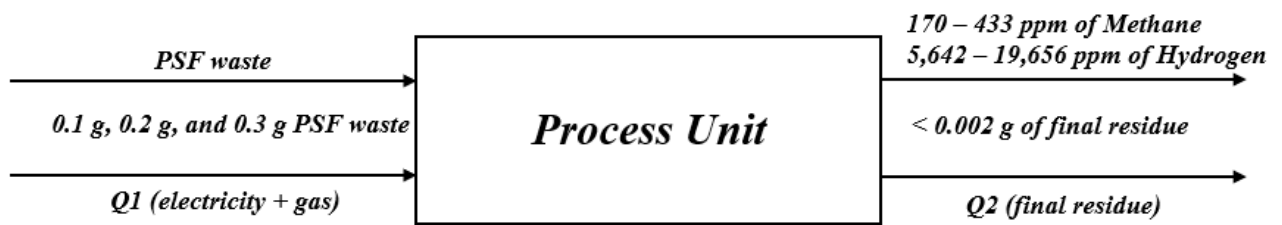

Fig S2. The final residue of PSF waste after treatment in an atmospheric-pressure microwave plasma reactor